February: Columbus Museum of Art

A December Facebook post from a new fan:
Closest thing I’ve had to a Christmas miracle: watching Broad & High for the first time with my dad. It’s not like I didn’t know about this brilliant paean to the robust creative scene here in Columbus; I just hadn’t gotten around to actually seeing it...I can honestly say it’s a great showpiece for the Arch City.

February:
Columbus Museum of Art

About 18 months ago, WOSU TV premiered a new weekly arts program called Broad & High. The title is a play on the downtown intersection, but it also reflects our goal to broadly focus on the burgeoning arts scene in central Ohio. It’s risky to commit precious resources to a weekly series, but we saw a growing void of substantive arts coverage in Columbus. Among the early achievements of Broad & High:

• The most viewed online video from WOSU in 2014 was the program’s “Day in the Life of a Ballerina” focusing on BalletMet’s Samantha Lewis. Watch it and all the show segments at wosu.org/broadandhigh.

• The programming we produce is seen across the country through a national collaborative, which means we sometimes air segments produced by other stations, and other PBS affiliates show our segments. Stories from Broad & High have now aired on stations in Philadelphia, Miami, Los Angeles, Washington, (and more) as part of their arts shows.

• In its first year, Broad & High won a regional Emmy® Award—the top local broadcast award in our business. That reflects the talents and commitment of our entire production team with our superb producer Jackie Shafer in the middle of all of it. The tremendous support of the Greater Columbus Arts Council has also been vital to the success of the program.

• A distinctive part of this project is that our team shares the videos with the arts organizations and artists profiled. This allows them to market themselves and extends the impact of our work. We’re proud we can provide these resources to build an audience for the arts!

If you miss Broad & High, you miss part of what makes our community exceptional. Make it a date or set your DVR for Wednesdays at 7:30 pm and Sundays at 5 pm, only on WOSU TV.

Broad & High—Growing the Arts

by TOM RIELAND, General Manager
Columbus Neighborhoods: Bexley
Premieres Sunday, February 15 at 8pm. Only on WOSU TV.

In the countryside east of Columbus at the turn of the century, two communities joined to form a village. That village became Bexley and the name was taken from the town in England where the ancestors of one of Bexley’s first prominent citizens had lived.

Among those moving east to enjoy life on the shady streets in Bexley were members of Columbus’ Jewish community. Descendants of European immigrants who settled on the South Side, their success allowed them to move east, away from the city.

Columbus Neighborhoods: Bexley explores both the diversity in the Jewish community and the diversity of religion in Bexley. Because the population and size of the city have remained virtually unchanged in the last 50 years, because the Bexley City Schools have always been among the best funded and most successful in all Ohio, and because it’s a destination community where families move to and then remain, the city has a reputation as a place that has escaped change. But a closer look reveals that Bexley has become more diverse racially and socioeconomically than many people realize.

Columbus Neighborhoods: Bexley also looks at the growth of Capital University, the community volunteers who saved the Drexel Theatre, the city’s longstanding commitment to education, and explores the natural beauty of the only municipality to be designated an arboretum.

Eager for more behind-the-scenes details on Columbus Neighborhoods: Bexley? Go to columbusneighborhoods.org all month long for web exclusives, bonus features and segments you won’t see on the show.

Don’t miss the next segment in the Emmy® award-winning documentary series. Columbus Neighborhoods: Bexley premieres Sunday, February 15 at 8pm. Only on WOSU TV.

To ring in the New Year with style, more than 150 people dressed in 1920s garb celebrating the start of Downton Abbey Season Five with a “Roaring Twenties Speakeasy and Screening” hosted by WOSU Public Media on January 3. With jazz music, hors d’oeuvres, signature cocktails like the Bee’s Knees, a Highclere Castle photo backdrop, and an extensive silent auction, guests were transported to a flapper-esque era at the Galbreath Pavilion.

After a talk on Prohibition by OSU Professor Brian Waters, another 50 guests joined the Speakeasy attendees in the Ohio Theatre for a free screening of the first episode of this next season of Downton Abbey.

It was a privilege for WOSU Public Media to provide such a unique experience to our PBS viewers and their support helps us to keep programming like Downton Abbey on the air. Don’t miss a moment of all of the drama and intrigue as Downton Abbey continues Sunday nights at 9pm through March 1 on WOSU TV.

Invisibilia Looks at Unseen Forces Behind Human Behavior

89.7 NPR News and NPR are airing a new program that explores a world we cannot see. Invisibilia focuses on the forces that shape human behavior—ideas, beliefs, assumptions, and thoughts.

This one-hour show, which takes its name from the Latin word meaning “all the invisible things,” is produced by NPR’s award-winning Science Desk. Listen to the show Sundays at 4pm on 89.7 NPR News.

Invisibilia looks at how people’s lives are shaped—and sometimes even controlled—by ideas and feelings that are powerful and rarely examined. Creators and co-hosts Alix Spiegel and Lulu Miller—who helped create the groundbreaking public radio programs This American Life and Radiolab—combine powerful storytelling and cutting-edge research from the pages of scientific journals to bring listeners a unique audio experience.

In the six-episode pilot season, Spiegel and Miller dig into how everyone has had, at times, dark, disturbing thoughts and whether those thoughts have any significance. They look at how fear can shape people’s actions; what causes fear and how to exert control over it. And they examine how expectations have real-world consequences so powerful that they overcome physical disability.

“Invisibilia will introduce you to people and ideas you’ve never encountered before,” said Spiegel. “We profile these very unusual people because their experiences allow us to look more closely at the invisible forces that shape us all—things like fear and empathy.”

“Each program is scientifically rigorous, jumping right to the heart of the latest psychological and brain research,” said Anne Gudenkauf, Senior Supervising Editor of NPR’s Science Desk and former WOSU producer. “Alix and Lulu show us how what scientists know sheds light on what we experience. Invisibilia anchors its examinations with intimate accounts from real people living at the boundaries of our understanding of that new science.”

Open your mind with Invisibilia Sunday afternoons at 4pm on 89.7 NPR News or get it on-demand through the WOSU Public Media Mobile App.

Every day a major, complex story seems to break—conflict in the Middle East, a new relationship with Cuba, Mayor Coleman forgoes re-election. The best place to keep up with and understand these rapidly changing events is Morning Edition on 89.7 NPR News. Each morning 89.7 and NPR provide central Ohio with the most comprehensive coverage of global and local events.

Steve Inskeep, Renée Montagne, Debbie Holmes and Steve Brown bring 89.7 NPR News listeners the latest details and provide thoughtful analysis. 89.7 also provides weather forecasts and up-to-the-minute traffic reports to help you start your day.

Listen to the difference. Wake up and begin your daily routine with 89.7 NPR News.

The American Sound
Saturdays at 6pm & Tuesdays at 7pm with Jennifer Hambrick

Each week in February on The American Sound, enjoy the rich legacies of noted African American conductors as Classical 101 celebrates Black History Month. Also this month we’ll experience one composer’s exploration of the proud American tradition of shape note singing with Barbara Harbach’s Emanations from the Sacred Harp. We’ll celebrate Arizona’s Statehood Day with a fun quickstep in honor of the desert state, and we’ll get some wisdom from the Yiddish advice columns with From a Bintel Brief by the witty Paul Schoenfield.

Fretworks
Saturdays & Wednesdays at 7pm with John Rittmeyer

This month John will be featuring works ranging from a contemporary guitar concerto to music inspired by an ancient Chinese legend. Christopher Parkening plays the guitar concerto written for him by film composer Elmer Bernstein, and Xuefei Yang has a solo guitar arrangement of music from the Butterfly Lovers for Valentine’s Day. Guitarist Jason Vieaux will join us in-studio for conversation and music, and we’ll celebrate the birthday of the great Andrés Segovia with selections performed by him and a couple of his most famous students. All this and more comes your way during February.
