WEAO Survives to become WOSU

By 1924, with two full-time staff, WEAO aired market reports, weather forecasts and news of interest every afternoon, with Thursday evenings reserved for live musical entertainment and educational lectures. The station was on the air about 20 hours every week.

Transmitter upgrades meant an expanded signal and the staff was excited to hear from listeners in Vermont, Florida and Texas. The station had a distinctive sound, thanks to the hiring of one of the few regular female announcers in the country, Ann Charles. The Orton Hall Chimes were often played to signify the start of a new program. WEAO had hired its first full-time director, Robert Higgy, a brilliant engineer who would hold the position for three decades.

WEAO would scratch and claw its way to survival, appealing to OSU administration constantly for support. The government changed the station’s frequency four times and ordered it to invest in new equipment and share time with commercial stations, or give up its license. Through the Depression years, the station distinguished itself by providing courses over the radio and registering college students unable to make it to Columbus.

Most educational institutions tried valiantly, but couldn’t support radio. Of the some 200 licenses granted to educational institutions in the early 1920s, only 38 stations remained on the air by 1937. The majority of the surviving stations were located at Midwest universities, many guided by a strong land grant mission of outreach and service. Strong advocacy efforts formalized at national institutes held annually at Ohio State assured that radio spectrum on the future FM band would be set aside for non-commercial entities.

The story of public broadcasting today started at a few places with a vision of using the medium to educate and inform, rather than entertain and sell. One of those places is The Ohio State University, which fully embraced educational radio in 1933 by changing its call letters from WEAO to WOSU.

Naming WOSU as beneficiary of your charitable gift annuity, remainder trust, or will are ways in which you can help leave a legacy to preserve public broadcasting for future generations.

It’s not the years in your life, it’s the life in your years

WOSU Public Media is proud to announce Next Avenue CBus, the website and series of community conversations where grown-ups keep growing.

Next Avenue CBus is the local application of a PBS national initiative that features an inclusive, vibrant, congenial, and virtual gathering room for curious learners to come together, discover and explore a constellation of trustworthy, inspirational, entertaining, and actionable content specifically tailored to the concerns and interests of the 50+ generation.

America is in the midst of an age boom and with it, an amazing transition. In general, those over the age of 50 are expected to live longer than any previous generation. WOSU Public Media wanted to create a local forum for this growing audience.

Share your stories on the community gathering room, wosu.org/nextavenuecbus. And look for more details on upcoming forums and workshops at WOSU@COSI.

Sports is tricky for public radio. We know many of our listeners like sports and closely follow news of their favorite teams and leagues. But many of our listeners don’t care and are turned off by coverage of pro and college sports.

So public radio balances the needs of the fanatic and the casual fan with what I call: “Sports for Eggheads.” Rather than dissect the quality of the Buckeyes’ third string offensive line, we put sports in perspective. As we report the final result, we look for a more thoughtful angle. We’ll look at growing enthusiasm about the Blue Jackets, the economic impact of the Columbus Clippers and the increasing influence of money in college sports.

NPR’s thoughtful sports coverage probably began with former Morning Edition host Bob Edwards’ Conversations with Red Barber. The Friday segments showed, despite heated rivalries, sports is a unifying force in American society.

NPR sports commentator Frank Deford carries on that tradition with his Wednesday essays which often bemoan the loss of innocence in big-time sports and the oversized influence of a certain cable sports network.

NPR listeners rely on their correspondent at big sporting events. Tom Goldman has been reporting on the World Series, Super Bowl and Olympic Games for two decades. His prose conveys the drama of competition without the clichés. Goldman tells personal stories. His most memorable piece came when the late Jack LaLanne put him through a chair workout during a 2004 profile.

Recently, 89.7 NPR News has stepped up its sports coverage. First we began with what we call “courtesy sportscasts” — basically letting listeners know who won last night’s game. No heavy analysis, just the score for those who went to bed before the final out.

Now WOSU’s new podcast, After the Score, expands our sports effort. WOSU Morning Anchor Steve Brown and Web Content Manager Thomas Bradley co-host the show, giving sports “eggheads” a good name. Each week they present the thinking person’s sports program. They interview sports stars like OSU basketball player Aaron Craft, local and national sports writers, and others about what’s happened on the court, ice and field. They profile unsung athletes and examine the business of sports.

Like any good sports fans, they rant—just a little, and use proper grammar.

So if you’re a junkie, looking for more thoughtful coverage of local and national sports, 89.7 and NPR have you covered.

Concierto: Hispanic Riches
New show airs Saturdays from 8–10pm

Concierto is a weekly two-hour program of classical music presented in Spanish and English. Hosted by Frank Dominguez, you’ll hear Hispanic artists and orchestras perform classical favorites alongside selections by Spanish and Latin American composers. A typical show may offer music of Smetana and Schubert as well as Sojo, Blasco, Soler, and more, performed by a number of musicians including Daniel Barenboim and Mirian Conti.

Why a classical program in Spanish? Dominguez says, “With Concierto, we are creating a perfect entryway to classical music for Latinos in America…Hispanic culture is more diverse than merengue and mariachi! Classical music has strong, deep roots in all the Americas, and Concierto’s programming reflects that diversity. This is truly international music.” Moreover, the bilingual presentation offers listeners an opportunity to hone or acquire second-language skills.

Beginning on Saturday, August 2, the program will be heard every Saturday night at 8pm on 101.1 and 89.7’s digital HD-2 channel (our classical repeater stations in Marion/Delaware/Mansfield/Coshocton/Portsmouth), online at wosu.org, and through our free mobile app.

Concierto is the first nationally available Spanish-English classical music service in America and is produced by WDAV Classical Public Radio in Davidson, NC.
The American Sound

Saturdays at 6pm with host Jennifer Hambrick

This month we’ll hear a Snazzy Sonata by Judith Lang Zaimont, enjoy an Irish Suite during the weekend of the Dublin Irish Festival, and squeeze every ounce of festivity out of the waning days of summer with David Gillingham’s Festivals. Also, be sure to tune in Aug. 16 for a musical summer vacation to Hawaii on the occasion of Hawaii Statehood Day.

Fretworks

Saturdays at 7pm with host John Rittmeyer

August’s artists will range from Swedish classical guitarist Mats Bergstrom to the slack-key guitar of Hawaiian performer Moses Kahumoku. Mandolinist Avi Avital will be accompanied by accordion, and Nicola Hall will play Paganini’s daunting Violin Concerto No. 2 in an arrangement for guitar and orchestra. We’ll hear a Boccherini guitar quintet, Haydn for three guitars and soprano Renee Fleming will be joined by guitarist Bill Frisell for the music of Stephen Foster.
