One day in September, Cynthia Ravitsky was driving to Ohio State’s Newark campus where she teaches math. She was listening to an interview on NPR’s Here and Now on 89.7 NPR News with author Gayle Forman discussing her new novel Leave Me. The book tells the story of a working mother of twins who is so busy, she doesn’t notice that she’s having a heart attack.

Ravitsky was stuck in heavy traffic on State Route 161 when she started to experience a pinching feeling across her chest as she listened to the interview. She thought the discomfort was possibly a muscle spasm, but didn’t think the pain was related to a heart attack.

On the radio, Forman talked about how the symptoms of heart attacks in women are so unusual they’re not the typical crushing chest pain.

Ravitsky, 67, said she eats a healthy diet, doesn’t smoke or have diabetes. For a moment though, she began to reconsider her symptoms, but figured the source of her discomfort had to be something else. Like Maribeth, the overworked mom in Forman’s novel, Ravitsky’s focus returned to the day ahead and her teaching schedule.

"I’ve got a lot of things to do, it’s probably nothing," Ravitsky mentioned of that moment, during an interview on All Sides with Ann Fisher. "I’ll go and teach and then on the way home I’ll stop in to the doctors."

Before Ravitsky could focus on her day any further, she suddenly broke out in a cold sweat and became very nauseous. Still stuck in traffic and with the interview continuing on the radio, she heard Forman repeatedly say not to ignore the symptoms of a heart attack.

"I heard Gail Forman say don’t ignore the symptoms and I thought to myself, oh my God," Ravitsky said.

"OK, I have to make a decision here and I had time because I was stuck in this traffic. Do I go about my business or do I go to work? Do I teach? But then she said again, don’t ignore the symptoms."

It was at that moment, she decided to drive herself to the nearest hospital. Ravitsky arrived at Licking Memorial Hospital in Newark, parked her car, walked up to the emergency room reception desk and said that she thought she was having a heart attack.

The hospital’s staff immediately took Ravitsky into an exam room and conducted an electrocardiogram test which confirmed she was in the middle of a heart attack. Her right artery was 99.9 percent blocked.

"Time is of the essence, as we all know, to save the heart muscle and so they were able to put the stent in and it all happened so fast," she said. "And here I was walking and thinking ‘Oh maybe I have indigestion.’"

Ravitsky is now recuperating following her heart attack.

Ravitsky is an avid listener of NPR on 89.7 NPR News and is amazed how the interview and the symptoms all happened at the same time to help save her life.

Ohio once again is playing a key role in the selection of our next president. When NPR’s Morning Edition came to Ohio to hear from voters before and after the second presidential debate, it called on 89.7’s Esther Honig to help.

As part of its Divided States project, NPR tasked Esther with finding a voter with a unique story in this unique campaign. She found Katie Rooney, a lifelong Republican who has decided to vote for Hillary Clinton. Esther visited Rooney at her New Albany home and participated in an interview with Morning Edition host Steve Inskeep. The mother of three said Clinton and not Donald Trump is suited for office.

“I support having a woman in the White House, what that means for me, what that means for my daughters,” Rooney told Inskeep and Honig.

The morning after the debate, Rooney reflected on the candidates’ performance in discussion with other Ohio voters.

NPR and WOSU value collaboration between local stations and the network. Listen for Esther and other 89.7 reporters on NPR in the future.

Symphony @ 7

Thursdays during November, explore Mozart’s last four great symphonies on Symphony at 7. On Nov. 3, we’ll start with Mozart’s Symphony No. 38, first performed in the city of Prague, where Mozartomania had taken root. Nov. 24, we’ll spend Thanksgiving evening with Mozart’s inspired Jupiter symphony.

Essential Classics

On Nov. 14 and 20, host Christopher Purdy brings you a program of music inspired by rivers on Essential Classics. Enjoy The Moldau by Bedrich Smetana, On the Beautiful Blue Danube by Johann Strauss and At the River – one of Aaron Copland’s Old American Songs.

The American Sound

This Thanksgiving weekend, enjoy a cornucopia of great American music Nov. 26 and 29 when The American Sound brings you an Anthem for Thanksgiving by William Billings, Richard Addinsell’s Smokey Mountains Concerto, selections from Don Ray’s Homestead Dances - and more.
