Technology in the Classroom

The rate of advancements in technology continues to push educational capabilities to new levels. We know that this rapid rate of change creates new challenges for educators as they prepare students for a fast-changing workforce and for jobs that don’t even exist yet. Technology’s importance in the classroom is evident now more than ever, and WOSU Classroom is there to help along the way.

WOSU Classroom develops research-based training programs to help teachers implement effective teaching and learning practices. Stop by WOSU and see high school teachers creating active learning activities for science class, librarians learning about design thinking with Makerspaces, elementary teachers learning to create a love for reading with technology, and school administrators exploring how to communicate with staff and community members in a new digital learning environment.

Educational technology has the potential to expand learning opportunities, create new student experiences and provide equitable access to learning materials. When combined with strong teaching practice, technology can accelerate learning and increase student engagement and motivation. Between grading papers, planning lessons, teaching, and meeting with parents, teachers are already over scheduled. WOSU Classroom is there to help them keep up with current practice, emerging technologies, and professional learning opportunities delivered in a variety of ways to meet a variety of needs.

We are also proud to partner and elevate our community experts. Our Excellence in Education Awards launched this year and we are proud to recognize our Outstanding Teacher, Heather Griffith! Heather’s outstanding teaching showcases the power of technology to reach all students and create personalized learning opportunities for all. Our Distinguished District, Pickerington Local Schools, demonstrates how innovation and a willingness to try new things has helped create, promote, and sustain a dynamic, digital-age learning environment.

Amy Palermo
Chief Content Director of Educational Technology
WOSU Classroom’s Outstanding Teacher Award

Meet Heather Griffith, 4th Grade Teacher at Fouse Elementary at Westerville City Schools.

Heather was the inaugural recipient of WOSU Classroom’s Outstanding Teacher Award, part of WOSU’s Excellence in Education awards which recognize the most outstanding school districts, leadership, and teachers in our community who demonstrate excellence and innovation in their educational practices.

Heather exemplified many of the award’s criteria, including having a positive impact on student learning and using technology in the classroom in an innovative way. Her nomination letter showed those values: “Every time I visit Heather’s classroom and she is not teaching, there are a number of teachers in her room exchanging ideas and modifying lessons with her to include technology. Heather understands the role of technology in personalizing learning for students and has built her class to include opportunities for students to control the path and pace of their learning.”

For Heather, introducing new media in her teaching environment just makes sense: “We use technology in my classroom because it helps me meet the needs of my learners in a more effective and efficient way.”

If you know an educator who has made a significant difference in their classroom, nominate them for their contributions and they will be recognized at the WOSU Classroom Innovation Mixer in April. Just go to wosu.org/classroom/wosu-education-awards for more details.

Curious George and the Man with the Yellow Hat are having a wonderful time getting ready for Christmas. There’s only one dilemma – neither of them can figure out what to give the other for a present!
Meet Paige Pfleger, 89.7 NPR News’ Newest Member

Paige joined WOSU’s team of journalists in September and immediately broke a story about antiquated court child custody guidelines. A Michigan native, Paige comes to Columbus from Philadelphia where she worked for WHYY. We sat down and asked Paige a few questions.

Q: Why did you choose 89.7 NPR News?
A: I’ve worked in a lot of places and many different mediums over the last few years – a newspaper, a magazine, a daily news podcast, a national public radio show – and nothing is quite like working at an NPR member station that focuses on hyper-local journalism the way that WOSU does. During the interview, I learned that this would not be a desk job – I would be out in the community, finding stories and meeting new people – and that is exactly what my first few months have been like.

Q: What guides you as a journalist?
A: The people we report on and the people we report for have always driven me. Huge and complex topics like healthcare matter because of their impact on everyday people, and that stories that might otherwise be dull can really shine because of the people we have the privilege of interviewing.

Q: What is the most interesting story you have covered.
A: I went to Puerto Rico to cover the one-year anniversary of Hurricane Maria where I reported on the agricultural devastation – the hurricane destroyed nearly 80% of the crops on the island. I profiled a small group of mostly women farmers in the mountains who implemented sustainable agriculture techniques in hopes of becoming more independent and resilient when the next hurricane comes. It was a challenge, especially because many of my interviews were in Spanish, but it was an incredibly rewarding experience.

Q: You have worked in Detroit, Washington, DC and Philadelphia. What are your impressions of Ohio?
A: I’ve always considered myself a very Midwestern person – I spent about 4 years on the east coast but I was born and raised in Detroit! When I got this job at WOSU I was excited to return to the Midwest and report stories about central Ohio. I love the heart, passion, and kindness of Midwesterners, and I definitely have seen all of those characteristics in my short time in Columbus so far.

Q: You graduated from the University of Michigan; why on earth would you study there?
A: Everyone makes mistakes. (The actual answer is that I got a scholarship...but I will always own up to my shortcomings. Please don't hold it against me!)

We won’t, so long as Paige keeps the Maize and Blue at home.
Our Christmas Gifts to You

On Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, your regular Classical 101 hosts will be spending time with family and friends. But we wanted to make sure you knew we’re thinking of you on the holiday, so each of our hosts has produced an hour-long special of holiday music we want to share with you. Please think of these as our gifts to you!

Chants and Revels for Christmas
Tuesday, December 25 at 6am
Host Christopher Purdy wakes up the children with music to celebrate the season….from liturgical to lively. Sing, dance, be loud and be contemplative. Chants and Revels for Christmas invites you to celebrate the holidays…with joy.

Christmas around the World
Tuesday, December 25 at 7am
Following Santa’s example, host Boyce Lancaster circumnavigates the globe spreading Christmas cheer!

Angelic Voices
Monday, December 24 at 9am
Saturday host and Classical 101 program director Cheryl Dring has compiled a program of music performed by the angelic voices of children. You’ll hear the Vienna Boys Choir and the Boys Choir of Harlem among others. Benjamin Britten’s Ceremony of Carols anchors the program.

A Quiet Christmas
Monday, December 24 at 5pm
Afternoon host Kent Teeters has prepared a program for quiet contemplation amidst the holiday hubbub.

An English Christmas
Tuesday, December 25 at 7pm
Jennifer Hambrick brings you music steeped in the rich traditions of English folksong and Anglican and Catholic Church music. Performances by Chanticleer, the Baltimore Consort, the London Symphony Orchestra and other world-class artists.
