There Is Something Different Here

In March 1981, I was a young television reporter in Mobile, Alabama when I covered my first of many protest marches — this one led by the Reverend Jesse Jackson. He came to Mobile to call for justice in the aftermath of the lynching of Michael Donald, a 19-year-old Black man randomly selected for death by the local United Klans of America. In a rare moment of racial clarity in Alabama, justice was eventually served, and the Klan collapsed.

Almost forty years later, there is something different here.

Instead of white supremacists, police officers who are sworn to protect and serve are being scrutinized for patterns of brutality and racism. The demonstrations set off by the horrifying death of George Floyd have mobilized America. A broad coalition of white and Black, young and old have protested in the streets of over 300 cities.

Police reforms may be put in place, the protests may stop, but racial injustice remains, and you don’t need to look far to see the issue. Columbus is one of the most economically segregated cities in America, where the rich and the poor occupy very different worlds. WOSU’s Chasing the Dream project tells the stories of Black families striving to get a foothold out of poverty. WOSU will use our reach and community presence to continue to tell those stories, to raise awareness, foster dialogue and bridge divides.

From Pandemic to Protests: WOSU News Shifts Coverage, Stays Safe

Just when things were settling into the “new normal” for the WOSU news team, George Floyd died at the knee of Minneapolis Police on Memorial Day.

Outrage over the video and long-simmering racial tensions quickly surfaced on the streets of downtown Columbus. For more than a week, thousands of loud but mainly peaceful protesters gathered at the statehouse and marched along High Street. At first the demonstrations featured vandalism, looting and numerous confrontations between police and protesters, many of whom were hit with tear gas, pepper spray and wooden projectiles.

Right in the midst of it were WOSU reporters. Nick Evans, Paige Pfleger, Adora Namigadde and Clare Roth all took turns recording the sounds and sights of the protests. They worked long hours, walked many miles following marchers up and down High Street, and occasionally felt the effects of tear gas.

It is crucial for reporters to personally witness such demonstrations, to provide our audience with an objective description of events, but it is equally crucial they protect themselves. Our instructions to them were get as close to the action as you can but stay safely on the sidelines. Capture the protesters’ passion but remain objective. If confronted by police, clearly identify yourself as a reporter and comply with their instructions. WOSU reporters had no major disputes with protesters or officers.

Covering a protest that stretches for many blocks or even miles is difficult. A significant act of vandalism or confrontation may occur far away. Social media is a great monitoring tool but is filled with false claims and rumors. WOSU reporters stuck with what they saw, what they knew, and what they could confirm, then relayed it to our listeners and digital audience.

Now our efforts turn to objectively examining the roles of police and protesters during the demonstrations and turning our eyes toward efforts to close the wide divide between police and the communities they serve.

And we still have a pandemic to cover.

July starts off with a bang ... literally

Make Classical 101 part of your July 4 celebrations for lots of inspiring American music.

Music in Mid-Ohio returns to the airwaves in July. With concerts around town canceled and no clear idea when they will resume, it will be a treat to hear some of Central Ohio’s very fine artists and ensembles. The 2020 season will contain some new performances from before the lockdown, and some highlights from past performance seasons. Christopher Purdy returns as host and producer of Music in Mid-Ohio. Hear it Sundays at 1pm.

As our local hosts continue their staged return to the Classical 101 studio, one program addition bears mentioning. Saturday Cinema with host Lynne Warfel has proved popular with listeners and will remain on the schedule going forward. If you are a fan of movie music, don’t miss it Saturday mornings at 11am.

July on The American Sound takes you on a summer vacation to sunny California, with Copland’s wistful music for The Red Pony. Experience the free-wheeling Jazz Age with A Jazz Symphony by George Antheil and enjoy the Rhapsody for Harp and Orchestra by Don Gillis, and the high-energy dances of Leonard Bernstein’s Divertimento for Orchestra, along with inspiring choral works by Eric Whitacre and Matthew Brown. Join host Jennifer Hambrick for The American Sound, 6pm Saturdays and 7pm Tuesdays on Classical 101.

There are lots of ways you can support the musicians who are currently silenced by the COVID-19 pandemic; listening and sharing their performances is just one way. Marvel at the excellence of our local music scene and get involved however you can.
